FOR A FULLY ON JANUARY 27, 2012, we will offer a radical new approach to understanding how to control written English. George Cooper, Professor of the Law School, at Duke University, shares insights into the Reader Expectation Approach to writing. The Honorable David M. Breyer, Senior Judge, The United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, will introduce Professor Cooper. Cooper has written several books on writing, including "Constitutional Law: Cases and Materials." This is an introduction to his Reader Expectation Approach, which is based on the new insight into how readers go about predicting the meaning of a sentence from word choice and structure. A reader takes the most important clues for how to make sense of a sentence from word choice then structures it. The sentence is one of the IE which it will be put. Cooper has served as a writing consultant to law firms, corporations, scientific research institutions, and governmental agencies.

Professor Cooper holds a J.D. and a Ph.D. in English, and he taught at Duke in 1988 to 1989. His book, "Constitutional Law: Cases and Materials," is written in a way that is accessible to students with a wide range of legal training. His book, "Constitutional Law: Cases and Materials," is written in a way that is accessible to students with a wide range of legal training.